CAREERS IN ENGLAND

A teacher. If you want to be a teacher, you have to pass an examination at about 18; and then you go to a college and you become a teacher after three or four years: when you have degree you must take a teaching diploma. After one year's teaching experience, you will be a qualified teacher.

A journalist. Journalists often start their career working on local papers: these are newspapers for people in one area of England, such as a town. Usually you have to work for years before you are a qualified journalist; if you have a degree, it is two years.

A nurse. If you wish to be a nurse, you can start training when you leave school. You then train in a hospital. Some of the time you are working in the hospital, some of the time you are studying for examinations. After two or three years' training you are a qualified nurse.
